Lincoln's Propositions.

WE recently reproduced from the Rochester Union a statement concerning sundry overtures made by Mr. Lincoln through F. P. Blair, senior to Gen. McClellan, at the time of the Niagara negotiations. These in substance were, an offer on the part of Mr. Lincoln, in consideration of the refusal of Gen. McClellan to become a candidate for the Presidency to dismiss Stanton from the Cabinet, and make the General Secretary of War; "to change his war policy to agree with the several memoranda made by Gen. McClellan in the early part of the war, and to give the southern people, distinguished from their leaders, such assurances as would speedily divert their support from Jeff Davis." Is it possible that there are any fair-minded men of any party who are not convinced of the despotic purposes of Mr. Lincoln? Are there any who are not convinced of his purpose to carry the election by force and fraud? There cannot be any.

He must be driven from that purpose by the menacing attitude of the people. He must be made to know what the popular temper is. Only in this way can violent revolution be averted.—Chicago Times.

Is it possible that there are any fair-minded diers to die that Lincoln may "keep faith" with a few negroes. The Springfield Republican says:

"We might recover all our white soldiers in rebet hands by the proposed exchange, and in rebet hands by the proposed exchange, and yet hold a large balance as hostages for the colored soldiers while their status is in controversy."
